The Natural Bridge.

Editors Dispatch: The purchase of the Natural-Bridge tract, which has been notied in your columns, was part of a gene-ral scheme, which is not yet fully developed. but which contemplates the laying out of a sloption of measures of prevention, and park that shall be extensive and impressive, and possibly the establishment of a school of forestry, at which, in mid-summer, practical lessons may be given. Professor Cleveland was invited, on account of his known fitness and national reputation, to examine the property and advise the best steps to be taken. A letter, somewhat personal, but which, I think, will be of public interest, bas just been received, and I hand it to you for publication. H. C. P.

CHICAGO, June 11, 1881. H. C. Parsons, Esq., President Alleghany

C. and I. Company, Richmond, Va.: Dear Sir,-I think I have succeeded in conveying to your miad, in the course of our conversations while at the Natural Bridge, a general impression of my conception of the proper treatment of the sublim and beautiful scenes comprised in the region surrounding that spot, and which the company you represent is now about developing and rendering easily accessible to the outside world. And I flatter myself, from the manner in which you received and re-sponded to my propositions, that they were in unison with your own ideas and wishes.

The subject, however, is one of such importance that it seems to me to demand a more formal statement of its requirements, and I now address you with the wish to make as clear and systematic an exposition as possible of what I conceive should be the governing principles of the work you are about to inaugurate in developing the whole area.

I purposely avoid the use of the technical term "improvement," which is commonly used by landscape-gardeners to describe their operations in the arrangement of landed property, as it conveys an idea so manifestly absurd and incongruous in its application to such scenes of grandeur and sublimity as we are now considering that its use could excite only a sense of the ridicu-lous, and should suffice to condemn the man who could thus apply it.

It is fortunate for the world that the whole region round about has been as yet so little disturbed that the lover of nature can find her most marvellous and beautiful works laid open to his inspection in their native wildness, without being shocked by secrations which seem almost insens rable from the admission of man into her

The work of the landscape-gardener The work of the landscape-gardener should consist solely in acting as the high H. W. S. CLEVELAND. priest of nature, preserving with reverent hand the features which constitute the ma never presuming to imagine that any possible construction of buman hands can add to their effect. His art will consist only in developing and rendering more obvious the popular eye the attractive charms which exist on every side, and to do this in such manner that no evidence of art will be per-ceptible, and this can only be done by the artist himself directing and watching the effect of every stroke.

The effort I made to show you how this might be done will give you a conception of my meaning, though that was but a rude and hasty exposition of it; but the opportunities for the development of similar, and often far more strikingly beautiful and picturesque results, are innumerable, and the work to be done consists in such developments, and in presenting them in the mos effective light by such judicious arrange-ment of drives, bridle- and foot-paths, seats, arbyrs, bridge-, &c., that visitors will be led involuntarily to the best points for their inspection. In considering the question of the arrangement of the grounds the subject naturally presents itself under three different headings-First, as it is assumed (and the whole work is based upon the assumption) that a considerable permanent population, and a will be attracted to the place, it is necessary to make provision for their occupancy I do not know whether you have yet adopted or considered the subject of selling, renting, or otherwise disposing of for residences and other buildings, which, of course, will become necessary; but the feature of immediate and pressing necessity in designing the arrangement of the tract should be the selection and sub-division of areas to be occupied by Villages or single residences, or for farms or manufacturing purposes. Except so far as may be absolutely necessary, the formal arrangement of continuous houses or blocks should be avoided; and especially in the case of cottages or more spacious residences the effect will be in far better keeping with the surrounding natural features if they are entirely independent of each other in their

A plan of the areas devoted to such use, howing the sub-divisions into lots, should be prepared as early as possible, so that any one who desired to erect a building of any kind could be at once informed of the lumits within which it could be permitted. This portion of the plan would of necessity include the roads or paths by which access could be had to areas thus appropriated. This, of course, will include all the most piectures our regions, and their boundary should be distinctly shown upon the plan and stringent regulations adopted and enforced for the preservation of their natural condition with severe republic for the com-condition, with severe penalties for the com-mission of any of the descerations which so frequently offend the eye in such resorts. The arrangement of the drives and paths through all these scenes must be the work of time and cannot be previously designed.

But no previous plan is needed for their creation, and their intricacy and uncertainty will add to the interest of exploring them, while the op, ortunities for their con-struction are so numerous that novelties with the tract will find on 'returning to it that new smal previously unexplored regions have been opened to them.

And finally, after these considerations of proper provision for the necessities and pleasures of occupants and visitors, comes the third and in some respect, most impor-

zation is indicated by the point he has attained in the cultivation of those products of the soil which supply the means of subsistence. He first cultivates a few cereals and roots; next the fruits which he finds growing wild in an imperfectly developed form, but susceptible of such improvement by cultivation as to minister largely to the comfort and enjoyment of his existence. But it is not till the highest stages of civilization are reached, and the native supplies of timber for its innumerable demands are becoming exhausted, that he adopts a systematic and exhausted, that he adopts a systematic and scientific process of tree-culture. The older Europe have long since been forced by their necessities to the adoption of stringent measures for the preserva-tion of forests and for careful instrucof stringent measures for the preserva-tion of forests and for careful instruc-tion in all that pertains to their growth and development. But we as a nation, in spite of the warnings which have been given us for years past by wise and far-seeing individuals, have gone on recklessly and improvidently destroying and even exporting and selling to other nations the forest treasures which Nature has supplied without making any provision for their preservation, development, or re-newal-verifying the adage of Franklin, that "experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other."

We have now reached the point, however, when the consciousness of impending danespecially are demanding the establishment of schools of forestry, in which instruction may be given in an art of which it may be said that practically we are still in a state of barbarous ignorance. The regions you are about opening to the world contain perhaps the richest native supply of hard tin ber still extant east of the Mississippi, and throughout the whole of that forest region the supply is susceptible of very large increase by proper development and culture. There is hardly an acre of it on which a large number of trees now standing, and which if left to themselves would never attain a size to fit them for anything but fuel, might not be developed by proper treatment into valuable timber.

What nobler use, then, could be devised for a portion of the tract under considera-tion than devoting it to practical and illustrative instruction in forestry?

Tree-culture for purposes of ornamentation could appropriately be illustrated in the groves and fields reserved for purposes of recreation, but tree-culture for timber is a very different process, and might be dis-played in all its stages, and would un-doubtedly constitute to a large portion of the visitors one of the most interesting features of the place.

Nurseries could be established for the growth of young trees, and the best and most economical modes of planting and culture of artificial forests could in a few years be shown in their different stages; while large areas of standing wood might be selected and used as schools of practical in-struction in the proper methods of thinning, pruning, and culture, to insure the best development of the greatest possible number of trees for uses as timber. It is obvious hat these areas would in time become in themselves valuable sources of revenue. but the intrinsic value of their material products would be insignificant in comparion with their worth to the State and nation in the means they would afford for instruction in the development of one of its most mportant sources of wealth. The areas devoted to such uses would appropriately form a portion of grounds which at all times would be open to public inspection, and would form one of the most attractive features of the domain, to which I dislike to apply the term "park," because that word has acquired a conventional meaning comprising the use of such artificial decorations as would in this case be entirely in-

A movement in this direction was made yesterday, when steps were taken to raise funds and to invite the French representatives to visit this city and State when they come to this country to take part in the ceremonies at Yorktown. This is a graceful remembrancer of the struggle in which all the colonies were joined, and in which France gave them such invaluable assistance. It will be trange if Pennsylvania's active participation in the celebration at Yorktown does not have the effect of renewing and making firmer than ever the fraternal feeling be tween the North and the South, which has never been very strong since long before the breaking-out of the rebellion.

Railroad Guillotine. NEGRO BOY KILLED ON THE RICHMOND AND ALLEGHANY RAILROAD-HIS HEAD IS IN-STANTLY SEVERED PROM THE BODY AND

ROLLED DOWN AN EMBANKMENT. As the eastward-bound mail train on the Richmond and Alleghany railroad neared a point this side of Tuckahoe yesterday after-noon a colored boy was discovered lying asleep on the track. The train was running very rapidly, and all the efforts of the engi-neer to awaken the sleeper by blowing the whistle were unavailing. The entire train passed over the unfortuate boy, and when he was reached it was found that the head had been completely severed from the body, and, carried along some fifteen feet, rolled down the embankment. The sight is represented to have been perfectly shocking. This reckless boy seems to have loved the danger whereby he perished, for it appears he was several times before found in this perilous position. Last week, his employer says, he was discovered asleep on the track near the point at which he met his death, lying just in the same posture. He was whipped for his thoughtlessness, and warned not to go near the track again; but it appeared to be a perfect infatuation with him. He was about fifteen years of age, and was employed minding stock. When struck he was lying in the bed of the track, where it was very deep, with his back to the comunharmed but that his head and one hand was lying on the rail. The deceased leaves a wife and two children. His remains were taken to his late residence, No. 1023 Seventeenth street.

THE BAZAAR ASSOCIATION-A HANDSOME DONATION .- A lot of land in the city of Richmond having recently been given to St. Paul's Church Home for Aged and Infirm Woman by a benevolent gentleman of this city, upon conditions that a building suitable for said home and infirmary for women, organized under the provisions of the act of incorporation, should be erected on said lot, the lady managers have determined, for the purpose of raising funds to erect the building, to hold a bazzar in the city of Richmond some time during the months of October and November next.

The Centennial celebration at Yorktown and the annual meeting here of the Virginia State Agricultural Society will both occur about the same time, and will naturally attract to this city a large concourse of people from all parts of the country, and it is thought this bazaar will thus furnish a good opportunity to display any articles that may

MANCHESTER AND VICINITY.

Portrait of an Eminent Mason.-Last night being St. John's night, there was an installation of officers of Manchester Lodge. No. 14, A. F. and A. M. A fine portrait of years ago, was one of the most prominent Masons of Virginia, and was at one time grand tiler of the Grand Lodge of the State. For fifteen years he, Dr. William A. Patteson, Captain William W. Weisiger, and William Walker-ill of whom are now dead-kept up this lodge, which is one of the oldest in this country.

Colored High-School.-The closing exer-eises of the Colored High-School were held yesterday morning. Several members of the School Board visited the school to hear the reading of the reports for the session, at the conclusion of which appropriate speeches were made by Superintendent Hancock and Mr. David J. Weisiger, of the School Board. The medal for the most proficient scholar was awarded to Lillie Moon. Jessie Binga, Thomas Johnson, and Angie Epps deserved honorable mention. The medal will be presented to the successful contestant next Wednesday night at the colored Baptist church by one of the mem bers of the School Board, and Superintendent Hancock will deliver an address to the scholars.

The Board was well pleased with the manner in which the school has been carried on this session, and the principal (Rev. A. Bings, Jr.,) deserves to be congratulated upon the general proficiency of all his scholars.
